Happy Healthy Tuesday!

February is National Heart Month so I like to take this opportunity every year to reflect on some of the ways we can protect our hearts. There are many precursors to heart disease, both diet-related and non-diet related. Stress, lack of exercise, depression, obesity, chronic lack of sleep, and age are all potentially linked with heart disease later in life. We have all been under more stress so it is important to take even small steps to keep our hearts happy.

What is one goal for the month? Here are some ideas to get you started:

- Lose a little weight – losing just 5-10 pounds can make a big difference for your blood pressure.
- Quit smoking (or cut back, if you're a heavy smoker).
- Watch out for sodium (canned soups, frozen pizza, frozen dinners, and bread are some of the ones to check).
- Add some color to your meals – try different fruits and vegetables.
- Reduce stress – try meditation or yoga (check YouTube; a lot of yoga studios stream classes online, or will be outside once it warms up).
- Laugh and stay social! Video chat with friends or go on socially distanced walks.

I encourage you to check out the American Heart Association website for tips on eating healthy, getting physical activity, quitting smoking, and other wellness ideas! This week’s recipe is a delicious take on a heart-healthy veggie!

Wishing you wellness,

P.S. Have you registered for our virtual Beds & Breakfast Conference yet? It’s in a day of gardening seminars to wash away the winter blues. Our virtual conference will empow communities to enact positive social change in this decade and beyond. Follow this link to learn more about the workshops and presenters and register.
